War in Europe.

The news from Europe, especially details of which will be found in our columns this week, is highly important, and shows that war has actually commenced. There has been no war yet, but an Austrian army has crossed the Ticino, a river forming the boundary between the Austrian province of Lombardy and Saxony, and it is probable will make a rapid advance on the Sardinian capital, and attempt its capture before the French troops can arrive. The latter are also pouring troops into Saxony, and the prospect is that a sanguinary battle must be fought before long. The sympathies of the people of all the Italian States seem to be strongly with Sardinia and France. A long course of tyranny and oppression on the part of the Austrians has awakened a feeling of hatred in the breast of the down-trodden Italians, and prepared them to receive the Sardinians with open arms as friends and deliverers.

At the peace of 1815, Lombardy, Venetia, and some other provinces in the north of Italy were ceded to Austria, which has since ruled over them with a rod of iron. Recently she has effected secret treaties with Naples, Tuscany, and other petty states, by which it is agreed that, in case of a popular rising and insurrection, these governments should have a right to ask Austria to put it down. This makes Austria the protector of despotism all over the Italian Peninsula. The States with whom she has these treaties are reduced to political vassalage, and the whole of Italy, with the exception of Sardinia, is virtually under her control. The discontent of the Italians gave evidence that a revolution was brewing, and an effort about to be made to rid themselves of the Austrian yoke. Sardinia has a liberal government, and all eyes were turned to her for aid. The other powers of Italy, fearing the danger of a revolution in Italy, and fearing that if such a movement were spread through the continent and cause a general uprising of the people and overthrow of thrones, sought to avert the evil by inducing Austria to abrogate her secret treaties with Naples, Sicily, and make such modifications and reforms in the government of her own provinces as might avert the threatened storm. Austria has refused to yield. France, as the ally of Sardinia, and the latter country, as the champion of freedom in Italy, have resolved to drive the oppressor from Italy, and the war is now commenced. How pure the motives of the champions may be remains to be tested. The King of Sardinia may think more of extending his own rule over the whole of Italy than of doing of establishing its liberties; and it certainly lacks incentive for a ruler who is so notoriously despotic and faithless as Napoleon to appear as the champion of freedom abroad. He probably only seeks to substitute French for Austrian tyranny in Italy. However, we hope for the best, and trust the result of the war, whatever the motives of those who have engaged in it, may be that the people not of Italy alone but of Europe, will be benefited, their liberties secured, and the power of their oppressors circumscribed.

It is reported that Russia has made a treaty with France, promising aid against Austria. This, if true, would look as if these two powers looked beyond the mere question of Italian freedom, and intended to control the affairs of Europe generally. England, as yet, takes no part in the struggle. She condemns the conduct of Austria, but cannot unite with France, and will, if possible, remain neutral, watching every opportunity to restore peace. Prussia and the German States are expected to aid Austria if that country is invaded; but will not probably interfere so long as the war is confined to Italy.

The effect of war is already felt in the markets. Cotton has fallen, and bondholders are rapidly rising. A general war in Europe will materially lessen the amount of grain raised there, and as a natural consequence America will be looked to to supply the deficiency. The war, if it continues, will afford us a good and sure market for all our produce and provisions, and however much Europe may suffer, America must be the gainer.

The Two Year Amendment.—The amendment proposed by the Republicans of Massachusetts to the constitution of that state, requiring naturalized citizens to remain two years after naturalization before being allowed to vote, has been ratified by a large majority at the popular vote to which it was subjected. Several prominent Republicans in other and more doubtful states opposed the amendment—not as unjust, but as impediment to peace—because of the effect it might have on the votes of such Germans as have usually voted with that party. The Republicans in Massachusetts felt strong enough to disregard these appeals, and give full scope to the feeling that party entanglement citizens of foreign birth. To eliminate the negro and degrade the adopted citizen is one of their cardinal principles, and will be secured in other states whenever they feel strong enough to do without the foreign vote. Massachusetts has not the example, and will be followed in due time in other Republican states if they succeed in the most Presidential election. Let these Germans who have hitherto acted with the Republicans hear this in time.

Mr. Alfred B. Greenwood, formerly member of Congress from Arkansas, has been appointed by the President Commissioner of Indian Affairs, vacant by the resignation of Hon. J. W. Dorr.

In this selection the President has shown his usual good judgment. Judge Greenwood is a gentleman of high character and standing, and acquired, while in Congress, an excellent reputation for good sense and practical business talent. His residence for many years on the frontier, in the immediate vicinity of some of the largest tribes of Indians, and the information and experience acquired by him during his long service as a member and as chairman of the Committee of Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives, peculiarly fit him for the important and responsible office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs. A better selection could not have been made.
